THE Managing Director, Capital College, United Kingdom, (UK), Mr. Taiwo Salami, has advised Nigerian students to explore every opportunity foreign universities education made accessible to them.

Speaking with the press recently about the coming of Capital College to Nigeria for the 2008/2009 admission process, Mr. Salami said that admission into the Capital College or any other institution in London or elsewhere was not as stressful as we had it in Nigeria, adding that foreign certificates from those institutions were tenable in any part of the world.

"Capital College is coming to Nigeria to enhance Nigerians' access to the United Kingdom's university education.

"More importantly, the course duration is very short and standard, considering the quality of teaching and research facilities and experienced lecturers in those institutions.

"Therefore, the cost should not discourage anybody who is determined to have quality education. If one can strive to find his way to this institution, he will be able to cope both financially and academically, especially if he is a serious student," he said.

According to him, Capital College is based in London and specially equipped to training professionals in the fields of Accountancy (ACCA) Business Management, Marketing and so on.

He said that the college had trained many Nigerians since its inception.

Education Tribune learnt that Mr. Salami left Nigeria in 1982 to study in the United Kingdom, where he obtained all his professional and academic qualifications, and he has been assisting Nigerians to get good university education in London.
